

STUDENT	PREDICTION	PREDICTION CONFIDENCE
Guided Student	AT RISK	29.5%

Executive Summary

This student is currently AT RISK of not passing, with a HIGH risk level. The prediction indicates a 50% chance of failure and a 50% chance of passing, due to the student's position almost exactly on the pass/fail boundary. The confidence level in this verdict is Low. As such, it is essential to treat this result as uncertain rather than a definitive decision.

The student's overall academic situation is concerning, with factors that need attention. To support educational decisions and improve outcomes, it is crucial to address these concerns promptly.

Key Findings

Positive findings include the importance of Parental support. However, the student faces significant challenges regarding Weekly study time and Number of absences.

Student Strengths

- Parental support

Areas Requiring Attention

- Weekly study time
-

Immediate Actions

- Call home after the 3rd absence, not the 10th.
 - Same-day catch-up materials so returning does not feel hopeless.
 - Arrange tutoring now - small groups of 3-5 are close to 1:1 in effect and far cheaper.
 - Brief the tutor with this report's factor list so sessions target the real gap.
 - Timetable a fixed slot: same time, same place, four days a week.
 - Start with two 45-minute focused blocks rather than one long session.
-

Long-Term Recommendations

- Attendance contract reviewed weekly with the student and family.
 - Fix the practical barrier first; motivation conversations come second.
 - Keep tutoring running once grades recover; withdrawing it early undoes the gain.
 - Tutor works on this week's class content, not a parallel syllabus.
 - Teach one technique properly - retrieval practice beats re-reading.
 - Offer supervised study at school for students with no quiet space at home.
-

Teacher Summary

The teacher should focus on immediate actions to address the student's attendance and study habits. It is essential to communicate with parents regularly, as their support can have a significant impact on the student's performance.

Parent Summary

As the student's parent, you are crucial in supporting your child's academic success. We recommend keeping a close eye on your child's attendance and encouraging them to develop good study habits. Regular communication with the teacher is essential for monitoring progress and making adjustments as needed.

Student Summary

You have the power to turn your academic situation around! Focus on developing consistent study habits, and work with your parents and teachers to create a plan that suits you best. Remember, every small step counts, and with time and effort, you can achieve your goals.

Final Note

This report is intended to support educational decisions and should not replace teacher judgment. The prediction may change as more information becomes available, so it's essential to continue monitoring the student's progress and making adjustments accordingly.